(II) and its complementary sequences may also be used as DNA probes in diagnostic polymerase chain reaction (PCR) and hybridisation assays to detect and quantitate the presence of similar nucleic acids in samples, and therefore which patients may be in need of restorative therapy. (I) may also be used as antigens in the production of antibodies against TCAPs and in assays to identify modulators of TCAP expression and activity. Anti-(I) antibodies and antagonists may also be used to down regulate TCAP expression and activity. The anti-(I) antibodies may also be used as diagnostic agents for detecting the presence of TCAPs in samples

For example, (I) and (II) may be used to treat disorders associated with decreased expression by rectifying mutations or deletions in a patient's genome that affect the activity of TCAPs by expressing inactive proteins or to supplement the patients own production of them. Additionally, (II) may be used to

(I) an (II) may be used in the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of diseases associated with inappropriate colon tumour associated protein (TCAP)

This sequence was purified using a carrier which can couple wheat germ agglutinin and haparin to separate MPO. Fragments of this sequence (see AR80039 and AAR80040) were used to produce the amplification primers shown in AAT04544 and AAT04545. The fragments amplified by these primers can then be used as probes to screen human cDNA libraries for MPO cDNA. The MPO cDNA can then be inserted into a plasmid which is used to transform cells to produce MPO. The MPO sequence is capable of promoting colony formation of megakaryocytes, enlarging the size of megakaryocytes and stimulating the proliferation of multipotential stem cells. The factor may be used for treating thrombocytopenia and hematocytopenia. The purification method can be used to isolate MPO from human urine or serums of patients with aplastic anaemia, and from animal blood or urine by radiation exposing the animals to induce aplastic anaemia.

The invention also relates to a nucleic acid encoding a CC human MSF-derived tribonectin; a biocompatible composition comprising a cc human tribonectin for inhibiting tissue adhesion formation; and a method CC of diagnosing osteoarthritis or a predisposition to osteoarthritis by CC measuring the amount of MSF or its fragment in a biological sample of a CC mammal, wherein an increased amount of MSF compared to a control CC control cont

Injection. The human CACP protein is identified in the invention as the being megakaryocyte stimulating factor (MSF). The gene encoding CACP protein (MSF) is located on chromosome 1925-31, and mutations in this gene are responsible for the heritable disorder camptodactyly-carthropathy-coxa vara-pericarditis, in which patients have synovial hyperplasia without evidence of inflammation. CACP protein (MSF) carts as a synovium lubricant, and can be used to lubricate tissue and Joints in the treatment of osteoarthritis. CC The invention relates to a human tribonectin which is a product of CC alternative splicing of the human MSF (megakaryocyte stimulating factor) Gene. The tribonectin has at least one O-linked oligosaccharide CC lubricating molety and has a polypeptide sequence comprising 1-76 CC repeats of a motif having at least 50% identity to the sequence KEPAPTT CC (AAB29774). The invention also relates to a nucleic acid encoding a CC human MSF-derived tribonectin; a biocompatible composition comprising a CC human MSF-derived tribonectin; a biocompatible composition comprising a CC human further control of MSF or its fragment in a biological sample of a CC diagnosing osteoarthritis or a predisposition to osteoarthritis by measuring the amount of MSF or its fragment in a biological sample of a CC indicates the presence of or predisposition to developing osteoarthritis. The tribonectin and DNA encoding it are useful in the CC mammalian joints, such as articulating joints of humans, dogs or horses. The tribonectin, when formulated as a membrane, foam, gel or fibre, is useful for inhibiting adhesion between two surfaces such as the injured CC issues of a mammal, where the injury is caused by a surgical insertion cor tribonectin may be used in gene therapy. The present sequence represents cc (meg-CSF). Exon I contains the initiating methionine, and encodes a CC classical mammalian protein secretion signal sequence. The sequence cc encoding the original meg-CSF includes exons II-IV and is thought to cterminate in the region between amino acid residues 134 - 147. The CC primary transcript of this gene may be cleaved in different ways to CC yield a family of mRNA's each encoding a different MSF protein. Exons CC V and VI are thought to be related to the activity of the factor and CC are also implicated in the stability, folding and processing of the CC synergy of MSF with other cytokines. Exons V - XII are believed to be implicated in the processing or folding of the appropriate structure of the resulting factor, ie. one or more of these exons may contain CC sequences which direct proteolytic cleavage, adhesion, organisation of the cellular matrix or extracellular matrix processing. Both naturally occuring and non-naturally occuring MSF's may be characterised by with the exons spliced together in differing orders to form different commembers of the MSF family.

These were derived from expressed sequence tags (ESTs) forensics, gene mapping, identification of mutations, to assess biodiversity and for nutritional purposes. The present sequence is a Novel M. tuberculosis proteins (see AAM31851-57) are claimed recombinant proteins, especially in bacterial, yeast, fungal or higher eukaryote host cells, and used for diagnosing tuberculosis and other mycobacterial infections in humans or animals. The claimed proteins can also be used for epidemiological studies, for monitoring vaccination, and for the development of vaccines and

Its amino acid sequence shows a high proline content, but there is no homology to any known proline-rich antigens of mycobacteria. Novel M. tuberculosis proteins (see AAW31851-57) are claimed. These can be produced as recombinant proteins, especially in bacterial, yeast, fungal or higher eukaryote host cells, and used for diagnosing tuberculosis and other mycobacterial infections in humans or animals. The claimed proteins can also be used for epidemiological studies, for monitoring vaccination, and for the development of vaccines and

The present sequence is obtained from a clustral x alignment with CC protein 608. Protein 608 was identified using the method of the invention after subjecting rat osteoblasts to mechanical stress. Expression of the CC 608 gene was found to be upregulated by about 3-fold in cells subjected to mechanical strain. The specification describes a method for the CC identification of genes responsive to a specific mechanical stress. The method comprises applying the mechanical stress to an organism (tissue CC cor cells comprising bone cells), isolating the specific cellular CC mRNA in comparison with control samples. The method is used to identify genes whose expression is responsive to a specific stress. The identify CC genes whose expression is responsive to a specific stress. The identify CC genes are employed in determining risk associated with a physiological or CC disease state. The risk determination methods are used for testing a cc method of the invention, are used for treating, preventing or controlling a physiological or disease state (especially osteoporosis or bone density or other factors causing or contributing to osteoporosis or controlling a physiological or causing or contributing to osteoporosis or bone density or other factors causing or contributing to osteoporosis or

Integrating protein conserved 23 amino acid dockerin conserved 23 amino acid social domain.

The invention relates to the isolation of proteins binding to a novel conserin type domain found in the C-terminal portion of Cip. The new condain is designated a type II dockerin domain (as compared to the type

If domain found on the catalytic subunits of the cellulosome). The type

If dockerin domain has some sequence similarity to the type I dockerins but is unable to bind type I cohesin domains.

The sequence presented here is an example of a protein which binds the novel type II dockerin domain sin the N-terminal portion of which the first domain (amino acid residues 28-192) is thought to bind CipA. The novel type II dockerin and cohesin domains can be used

An example of such a complex is the cellulose degrading protein complex from Clostridium thermocellum, known as the cellulosome. This complex comprises around 15 proteins including endoglucanases, cellobiohydratases, hemicellulases, e.g. xylanases or lichinases, which interact with a central "scaffold" protein designated the cellulases.

                      (I) and (II) can be used in gene therapy and vaccine production. (I) and (II) may be used in the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of diseases associated with inappropriate colon tumour associated protein (TCAP) expression, such as colonic cancer. For example, (I) and (II) may be used to treat disorders associated with decreased expression by rectifying mutations or deletions in a patient's genome that affect the rectifying mutations or deletions in a patient's genome that affect the patients own production of them. Additionally, (II) may be used to produce the TCAP proteins, by inserting the nucleic acids into a host cell culturing the cell to express the protein. (II) and its polymerase chain reaction (PCR) and hybridisation assays to detect and quantitate the presence of similar nucleic acids in samples, and therefore which patients may be in need of restorative therapy. (I) may also be used as antigens in the production of antibodies against TCAPs and in assays to identify modulators of TCAP expression and activity. Anti-(I) antibodies and antagonists may also be used to down regulate TCAP expression and activity. The anti-(I) antibodies may also be used as diagnostic agents for detecting the presence of TCAPs in samples (e.g. by enzyme linked immunosorbant assay (ELISA)). AA128460 to AA12951 and AAM24494 to AAM24523 represent nucleotide and amino acid sequences given in the exemplification of the present invention.

                 This sequence represents the human megakaryocytopoientin (MPO) protein. This sequence was purified using a carrier which can couple wheat germ aggluthnin and heparin to separate MPO. Fragments of this sequence (see AAR80039 and AAR80040) were used to produce the amplification primers shown in AAF04544 and AAF04545. The fragments amplified by these primers can then be used as probes to screen human cDNA libraries for MPO cDNA. The MPO cDNA can then be inserted into a plasmid which is used to transform cells to produce MPO. The MPO sequence is capable of promoting colony formation of megakaryocytes, enlarging the size of megakaryocytes and stimulating the proliferation of multipotential stem cells. The factor may be used for treating thrombocytopenia and hematocytopenia. The purification method can be used to isolate MPO from human urine or serums of patients with aplastic anaemia, and from animal blood or urine by radiation exposing the animals to induce aplastic anaemia.

The tribonectin and DNA encoding it are useful in the treatment of osteoarthritis, where they may be used for lubricating mammalian joints, such as articulating joints of humans, dogs or horses. The tribonectin, when formulated as a membrane, foam, gel or fibre, is useful for inhibiting adhesion between two surfaces such as the injured tissues of a mammal, where the injury is caused by a surgical insertion or trauma, or an artificial device e.g., an orthopaedic implant. In particular, one of the surfaces is pericardial tissue. DNA encoding a tribonectin may be used in gene therapy. The present sequence represents

The tribonectin has at least one o-linked oligosaccharide lubricating moiety and has a polypeptide sequence comprising 1-76 repeats of a motif having at least 50% identity to the sequence KEPAPTT (AAB29774). The invention also relates to a nucleic acid encoding a human MSF-derived tribonectin; a biocompatible composition comprising a human tribonectin for inhibiting tissue adhesion formation; and a method of diagnostic content for inhibiting tissue adhesion formation; and a method of diagnostic content for inhibiting tissue adhesion formation; and a method of diagnostic content of the sequence of osteoarthritis. The tribonectin and DNA encoding it are useful in the treatment of osteoarthritis, where they may be used for lubricating mammalian joints, such as articulating joints of humans, dogs or horses. The tribonectin, when formulated as a membrane, foam, gel or fibre, is useful for inhibiting adhesion between two surfaces such as the injured tissues of a mammal, where the injury is caused by a surgical insertion or trauma, or an artificial device e.g., an orthopaedic implant. CC The composition may further comprise a local anaesthetic. The composition cC of the invention may be administered via intra-articular or intravenous clipetion. The human CACP protein is identified in the invention as cC being megakaryocyte stimulating factor (MSF). The gene encoding cC CACP protein (MSF) is located on chromosome 1925-31, and mutations in cC this gene are responsible for the heritable disorder camptodactyly-cC arthropathy-coxa vara-pericarditis, in which patients have synovial cC hyperplasia without evidence of inflammation. CACP protein (MSF) cC acts as a synovium lubricant, and can be used to lubricate tissue and cC joints in the treatment of osteoarthritis. The composition may be cC applied to reduce the symptoms of osteoarthritis (e.g., joint pain, cC loss of range of movement or joint damage). The present sequence cC represents human megakaryocyte stimulating factor (MSF, CACP protein).

             The invention relates to a human tribonectin which is a product of alternative splicing of the human MSF (megakaryocyte stimulating factor) gene. The tribonectin has at least one O-linked oligosaccharide lubricating moiety and has a polypeptide sequence comprising 1-76 repeats of a motif having at least 50% identity to the sequence KEPAPTT (AAB29774). The invention also relates to a nucleic acid encoding a human MSF-derived tribonectin; a biocompatible composition comprising a human tribonectin for inhibiting tissue adhesion formation; and a method

This covered by the addition of an N-terminal sequence encoding CC sequence is modified by the addition of an N-terminal sequence encoding CC terminating codon following exon IV. The cDNA sequence given contains CC (meg-CSF). Exon I contains the initiating methionine, and encodes a CC classical mammalian protein secretion signal sequence. The sequence cc encoding the original meg-CSF includes exons II-IV and is thought to CC terminate in the region between mainto acid residues 134 - 147. The CC yield a family of mRNA's each encoding a different ways to CC vield a family of mRNA's each encoding a different MSF protein. Exons CC vield a family of mRNA's each encoding a different MSF protein. Exons CC vield a family of the stability, folding and processing of the complicated in the stability, folding and processing of the CC synergy of MSF with other cytokines. Exons V - XII are believed to be cimplicated in the processing or folding of the appropriate structure of the resulting factor, ie. one or more of these exons may contain CC sequences which direct proteolytic cleavage, adhesion, organisation of the cellular matrix processing. Both naturally occurring and non-naturally occurring mSF's may be characterised by carfous combinations of alternatively spliced exons from this sequence, with the exons spliced together in differing orders to form different CC members of the MSF family.
